CFBSJS Membership Form

The Centre for Forensic Behavioural Sciences and Justice Studies welcomes membership from academics, government, and community representatives who conduct research or who work in the areas of crime, justice, and corrections. The Centre seeks to build a diverse and engaged membership that will help the Centre fulfill its vision of becoming an international leader in promoting interdisciplinary research and education, and addressing critical issues of crime and justice, including those specific to the operation of the criminal justice and corrections systems, and the care of offenders in Saskatchewan, Canada, and beyond. While professionals from a wide range of backgrounds and disciplines may become members of the Centre, all members must agree to meet the following expectations:

- Have a current interest in crime, justice and/or corrections;
- Share knowledge and experience with other Centre members, student affiliates of the Centre, and the general public through delivery of guest lectures, presentations, or other educational events, as appropriate;
- Attend and participate in Centre activities and events, when possible;
- Collaborate with other Centre members in joint research, education, or engagement initiatives, as appropriate;
- Assist in the identification and creation of new research and educational opportunities for the Centre;
- Participate on review committees for student and faculty research awards funded through the Centre;
- Contribute to setting directions for the Centre through the election of a Centre Executive committee (comprised of U of S faculty) every three years (U of S faculty only).

To confirm your interest in becoming a Centre member please save this form and:

1. identify your affiliation;
2. enter your full name, title, and a brief biography including your academic and applied research background;
